THE JEWS PRAYED

The fantastic conglomeration of storekeepers and violinists and pedlars and cinema magnates and lawyers and pantmakers the people known as the "Jews" hearkened to a call within them and on the set day, hastened to pray to the Jehovah of their ancestors.

They invoked the generosity of God. The God who entered into covenants with Abraham. The God who guided the escaped slaves from Egypt across the desert. The God who inspired the lyre of David. The God who inflamed the hearts of noble martyrs with holy resolve to die. The God who oversees the destiny of the shattered Jewish nation and invests it with the value of historic continuity.

Did a vagrant note break out somewhere from the sub-regions of Jewish emotions, escape from the hubub and din of soulless prayer, and fuse with the old harmonies of Jewish groans and wails which warm the heart of the heavenly Father? Else the motley crew might pray and plead and God would not know that they were the children He once loved.

SUCCOTH

Who will sit on a hard bench, at a trestle table, in a flimsy, make-shift hut in the back yard, shivering with the cold, looking through a porous ceiling of pine twigs at a moon-lit and star-bedecked sky? Who will listen to the droning of prayers and grace cadenced with the chill note of autumn? The breeze that will blow through the chinks in the walls may bear a faint odor of the fields and garnered harvests of old Palestine.

The Feast of Tabernacles will be here -who will sit in the "succoth" and celebrate this festival of autumn?

EDUCATION FOR ADULTS

We read with enjoyment the announcement in last week's issue of THE REVIEW of the inauguration in Montreal of a college for Jewish learning under the control of Rabbi Stern. The problem of Jewish education is generally envisaged as that of affording a smattering of Jewish education to the youth. It seldom occurs to one, that it is highly important to provide some measure of education for the adults.

Several years ago an attempt was made in Montreal to provide extension courses in a variety of Jewish and general subjects to the Yiddish-speaking public. Accommodations were secured in a public school, and some very fine lectures were delivered to large and appreciative audiences. Similarly an attempt was made in Toronto on a more limited scale to provide educational facilities for the adult Jewish-speaking public. One of the courses offered here was on the subject of Greek philosophy, and it was indeed a treat to see a group of adults taking down notes on Anoxagoras and Parmenides.

The English-speaking public are presumably versed in secular subjects. But the majority can certainly stand a little more intimate acquaintance with topics of Jewish learning.

We will follow the exploits of the adult pupils in the new institute with interest. The venture, if successful, will have to be emulated in Toronto.

In all seriousness, it occurs to us that a college must have a yell. We will be anxious to hear the new yell.

THOSE DAMNED FOREIGNERS

RABBI FERDINAND M. ISSERMAN

In the past few months since the tempest has been settling in the immigration teapot, rancous voices have in grating, rasping tones assailed the non-British settlers in Canada, and have endeavoured to raise the alarm against the inevitable doom of our Dominion if none of "these damned foreigners" will be admitted. The first patriot to sound the warning against the foreign menace was a western ecclesiastic who temporarily forgot the humility and kindliness he preaches and advocates, to condemn some of his neighbours, who though of non-British origin were yet made in the image of God. He coined the classic contrast of "British Australia" and "mongrel Canada." He aroused the resentment of many Canadians in the West by his un-Christlike denunciation of thousands of industrious, energetic and decent people. He was soon joined by others, and their diatribes screeched from newspaper headlines. Recently we in Toronto have been treated to a series of journalistic articles which from their tone took their text from his ecclesiastic. And the climax was reached when the adoption of the quota law was urged for Canada.

Why does this chorus rage? There appears to be amongst them the fear that the influx of non-British settlers would tend to attenuate the ties to great Britain, and might eventually make for Canadian independence. All these denunciations were from ardent British imperialists, but we fear that their enthusiasm has run away with their judgment. The British empire is composed of many nations, of many races, of many faiths. More Mohammedans than Christians live under the aegis of the Union Jack. White men and black men, yellow men and red men are among the subjects of King George. In view of this heterogenous mass of peoples who comprise the empire, it is bad imperial policy for any group in the empire to cast aspersions or point the finger of scorn at any other. The true imperialist will seek to inculcate love and not hatred, harmony and not distrust between the various elements in the empire. The imperialist, therefore, who indulges in any display of bigotry or intolerance of minority groups promotes civil discord, and frustrates the very ideal to which he is attached. British imperialism that is sincere and genuine will endeavour to establish bonds of sympathy between the divergent races and nations gathered together under the imperial flag. Our

CLEANERS AND DYERS

Ali Hasan

By EPHRAIM GOLDBERG

(Translated from Yiddish of Yehoash)

At the age of thirty Ali Hasan knew by heart every line in the holy Koran and all the wise, profound commentaries which grew up like a dense forest around the Book of the Prophet in the course of hundreds of years, and was able to untangle the most entangled religious questions. In a word, his mind was a nest of wisdom.

But Ali Hasan's spirit was as thirsty for knowledge as are the banks of the Nile before the oncoming waters quench their thirst. And his soul languished for learning as the burning sands of the Sahara pine for rain.

So Ali Hasan said to himself: "The holy Koran and the holy commentaries teach me what I shall do and what I shall not do, clearly and explicitly instructing me how to lead my life. But what is life? . . ."

Ali Hasan desired to know the mystery of life.

He wandered into a distant wilderness. And with the same untiring zeal that he had sought in the past to learn and to know by heart the holy Koran and the wise words of the commentators, he now strove to forget all he had learned. For he argued: "The Prophet, who wrote the Koran, did not have a book wherefrom to read and to learn. So where did he get his wisdom? Where is the well wherefrom sprung his wisdom?"

That well Ali Hasan set out to re-discover. He thought that sooner or later, when his mind would be clear of all the learning that had gathered from strange sources, there would appear a well out of the depths of which would pour forth a crystal-clear stream, and that would be the real wisdom. . . . .

For years he enjoyed his seclusion. He saw no one, neither man nor animal; nor heard a sound. He merely waited and patiently listened to the mysteries of his own soul. . . .

Then he got back his own soul—not the soul that the Koran or the wise commentators had given him. His soul was now free and his own, and it lived and mused like the whistling wind, like the singing birds. . . .

But the old question: "What is life?" had not been answered.

Upon arising one morning after a restless and sleepless night, he said to himself:

"He who desires to learn of the grasses and the herbs will not seek them in a sandy earth, and he who wishes to explore the streams will not seek them in a desert land. So how can I explore life by lying about in a wilderness where the only signs of life are the silent stars in heaven and gleaming rays of the sun on the earth?"

Ali Hasan left his booth and deserted the wilderness for the beautiful and fragrant valley of Cashmere, in the land of blooming roses and silvery streams. Around him throbbed life in richness and in splendor, and he drank thirstily from life's golden fountains. But once, when he was lying near a small forest, listening to the buzzing flies as they jumped from leaf to leaf, he said to himself:

"More tumultuous and richer are the lives of human beings than the life in the beautiful valleys. And if I am to understand life, I must go where people are, where hundreds of thousands are crowding each other. . . ."

He repaired to the large city of Al-Cataba, where camels bring wanderers and buyers from Kherson and from India, and from Arabia; where the streets are flooded with masses of people.

"Here," he said to himself, "I will find out the secret of life."

He repaired to the "Gate of Marriage," where from early morning till late into the night he stood observing how pair after pair of marrying couples passed through, accompanied by cheerful and elegantly attired friends and acquaintances, while zithers and guitars played on unceasingly and merriment and laughter echoed in all directions. And suddenly a wave of merriment enwrapped his own soul.

Late that night when he went to his sleeping quarters, his feet were dancing, his eyes gleaming, and his cheeks aflame. He thought the starry sky above his roof one capacious cupola, beneath which zithers and guitars played a merry march, untiringly. It also seemed as if a black curtain arose, displaying a clear light which was illuminating him and everything around him, and that all the puzzling questions were answered. The old secret: what is life? was revealed to him.

"Life is merriment," said Ali Hasan to himself.

But on the morrow he thought it over and went to the "Gate of Leprosy," where those afflicted with the itching of the skin come to get their food at the municipal distributing station. For hours he stood there and observed the half-naked, sunburned and undernourished sick people come and go. He looked deep into their despondent eyes. Their sighing and moaning, like vitriol, entered his ear.

Late that night when he went to his quarters of rest, his lips were tightly pressed and in his bosom was a deep pain. Yet a hitherto unknown strength came to him from somewhere, and he felt strong. Battling with the pain and despondency in his heart, he detected an unknown power. He lifted high his head, not because of joy, not because of pride, but because of the strength . . . the strength of pain. . . .

He was now enlightened. There was no room for doubt and no lack of knowledge in his mind as to what is life.

"Life is suffering," proclaimed Ali Hasan to the darkness of the night.

But on the morrow he went to the "Gate of Buyers." There was noise and tumult among thousands of people who came from all parts of the world to exchange their merchandise. He saw there fine silk textures from Cashmere, the beautiful crocheted tapestry from Persia, the artistically carved ivory works of Japan. The displays were so beautiful and so impressive that he could not divert his attention from them.

Ali Hasan said to himself:

"How enticing and loving is the human spirit in silks and in ivory! How man's cleverness and enterprise bring together masses of people to exchange their labour, so all in turn may prosper and beautify their lives!"

When he returned to his lodging late that night, a sweet calmness weaved itself around his spirit, and he said:

"Life is to achieve, and life's most beautiful flower is Art."

But on the morrow he went to the "Gate of the Dead." There he saw how one corpse after another was brought for burial, with the unending procession of the ever-increasing mourners.

Heart-broken and sick, he went to his lodging that night, knowing that there was no more a secret as to what life is. He meditated:

"All streams of life pull toward and fall into the ocean of death. The more uneven and the longer the road, the worse; and the more even and the shorter the route, the better . . . ."

eyes exactly what he had seen in the city for the last four days with his human eyes. And his restlessness of long ago returned.

His soul wandered from picture to picture, but not one of them appeased his soul's hunger. . . . The pictures were so arranged that when looking at one the next one could not be seen. His soul knew that not one of them was perfect in itself, that to understand them, it was necessary to view them collectively.

Ali Hasan drooped his head down to his knees, and sat down for seven days and seven nights, crying:

Canadian imperialists have been myopic in their assaults on minority groups, and have a petty conception of the implications of empire.

As for the term mongrel Canada, if by that is meant a Canada composed of diverse racial strains, then it is accurately used. But if so, we can also speak of mongrel Britain. No less an historian than Sir John Marriat, one of the spokesmen of the empire parliamentary delegation, declared in an address at Hart House that the British are a mongrel, i.e., a mixed race—and he enumerated about a dozen races which contributed to the ancestry of the modern Britisher. Nor were all these races Nordic.

What have these damned foreigners done for Canada? They have helped build her empty places. They have made fertile fields of wild prairies. They have gone into Canada's mines and dug out her wealth. A few months ago during a great mine disaster in Ontario, we read a list of those who perished, and almost all of the names were of "mongrel" origin. These foreigners had given their lives that Canada might prosper. Go and read the roster of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra! Eliminate the foreign names, and there will be left neither orchestra nor conductor. Walk about Toronto's downtown streets! Eliminate the structures built by and conceived by immigrants or sons of immigrants and Toronto would lose some of its most artistic skyscrapers. No one who pretends to be fair can disparage the contribution of the foreigner to Canadian life.

In Great Britain a new relationship between capital and labour is being evolved. It is termed Moodism, after Sir Alfred Mond who proposed it. Sir Alfred also is the son of immigrants to Great Britain, and stands out to-day among the empire's finest thinkers and most enterprising leaders. What Mond has done and is doing for the empire, thousands and thousands of foreigners albeit in a smaller scale will and can do for Canada.

Nor will these foreigners prove anti-British. They will love and appreciate the country which gives them freedom, economic opportunities and the greater happiness those opportunities make possible.

And lastly may we suggest to fellow teachers of religion that the primary duty of a religious leader is to cultivate love and fellowship, peace and goodwill, instead of hatred, intolerance, bigotry and tribalism. As I read these ecclesiastical pronunciations with their venom against foreigners, I was reminded of the prophet Jonah. He, too, was interested in his own tribe and did not want to save Nineveh, the "mongrel" city. But God rebuked him, and taught him that the people of Nineveh, too, were His children, from whom His love was not withdrawn. We believe that the God of all humanity must regard as His children, even those damned foreigners, the mongrel peoples of Canada.

COMPLETED SOCIAL JUSTICE PROGRAMME OF THE CENTRAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN RABBIS

This will complete the social justice platform of the Central Conference of American Rabbis, the first eight articles of which were published last week:

IX. Unemployment. Present day economic ills make the unemployment problem exceedingly vital. We endorse plans for national interlocking employment agencies, unemployment reserve funds, stabilization of employment in periods of depression by part-time work, and unemployment insurance, as essential steps in alleviating the physical and moral distress of this evil.

X. Social Insurance. We urge adoption and expansion of old age pensions, mothers' pensions, workers' health and accident insurance, and state-directed rehabilitation of industrial cripples.

XI. Hours of Labour and Days of Rest. We support the reduction of hours of labour to the lowest possible point consistent with physical, mental and moral good, with an unqualified maximum of eight hours per day, and with a five-day week wherever possible.

XII. Women in Industry. We advocate special regard for the health and safety of women in industry and for their equal pay with men for equal work.

XIII. Child Labour. We oppose child labour in any and all forms and ask for proper and immediate state or federal legislation.

XIV. Prisons and Penal Laws. Society's right to self-protection implies society's moral obligation to remove, wherever possible, causes of crime and to make punishment corrective in its spirit rather than retributional.

XV. Lynching. We decry lynching both as to the deed itself and the moral attitude which actuates or condones it.

XVI. Civil Liberties. We urge unqualified adherence to the constitutional rights of freedom of speech, press and peaceable assemblage. We maintain the right and duty of a free pulpit. We condemn suppression of constitutional freedom by misuses of the Federal injunction.

XVII. Social Justice in International Relations. We believe that nations ought to outlaw war. We oppose economic imperialism, especially interference by force of arms with the autonomy of other nations to further claims of foreign investors in those lands. We condemn foreign investors who refuse to abide by the laws of the land in which the investment is made. We believe a popular referendum with absolutely free speech and press ought precede any declaration of war. We advocate an international conference to prevent private manufacture of arms. We oppose compulsory military training in schools and colleges. We advocate for our educational system the extollation of the virtues of peace rather than those of war.

PRO-PALESTINE COMMITTEE FORMED AT SOCIALIST INTERNATIONAL

Palestine played an important part in the deliberations of the Labour and Socialist International, which took place in Brussels recently.

The project sponsored by Mr. Emil Vandervelde, the Belgian Socialist leader, for the establishment in connection with the Labour and Socialist International, of a special committee to further, in the International field, the efforts of the Palestine labour movement in developing the Jewish National Home, caused a serious clash at the meeting in Brussels of the Executive Council of the Socialist International, between Mr. Arthur Henderson, M.P., the chairman of the International, who presided, and Dr. Friedrich Adler, the secretary.

During M. Vandervelde's recent stay in Berlin, a committee was formed on the initiative of a Poale Zion World Confederation Bureau, including among its members Mr. Vandervelde, Mr. Arthur Henderson, Deputy Leon Blum, the leader of the French Socialist Party, and Mr. Edward Bernstein, of the German Socialist movement, to call a conference in Brussels during the present meeting of the International, with the object of assisting the Jewish labour work on behalf of Palestine.

Dr. Adler, in his speech at the opening of the meeting of the Executive Council, maintained that the Poale Zion was playing too prominent a part in the International as compared with other parties. A stormy debate followed, in the course of which Mr. Abramovich, representing the Russian Social Democratic Party, and Mr. Otto Bauer, leader of the Austrian Social Democratic Party, both supported Dr. Adler. Mr. Henderson thereupon threatened that if he was not allowed to take part in the work of the Commission he would resign his position as chairman of the International.

The question of the anti-Jewish feeling which prevails in the Labour and Socialist movement in Poland, was raised by Dr. Joseph Kruk, of Poland, who cited the May Day demonstrations in Poland, in which Jewish workers found it impossible to demonstrate together with their Polish comrades, because of anti-Jewish disturbances. The problem of anti-Semitism among the Polish Socialists was also brought up at the meeting of the special committee on Polish affairs, when Mr. Otto Bauer, the leader of the Austrian Socialist Party; Mr. Check, vice-president of the Czecho-Slovakian Parliament; Mr. Grimm, the leader of the Socialist Party in Switzerland, and Mr. Fenner Brockway, the secretary of the British Independent Labour Party, supported the resolution for the creation of unity between all peoples working in Poland.

Miss Fannie Hurst, accompanied by her husband, Jack S. Danielson, pianist, returned from Europe last week. While abroad Miss Hurst has been working on a new novel which will touch on American domestic life.

Yechiel Bornstein, widely known as a leading expert on the Jewish calendar, passed away at the age of 85, in Warsaw, Poland. His works, written mainly in Hebrew, are available in several languages.

COMMENTARIES

By Rabbi Harry J. Stern, of Montreal
Associate Contributing Editor

A FALSE STANDARD

In Montreal one's social standing and Jewishness are usually measured by the amount the individual contributes or is "made" to contribute to organized charity. A man may neglect the synagogue, scoff at things holy and sacred, he may even negate Jewish culture, his ethical standards may not be the highest—all these matter little as long as he gives liberally to Federation! Then that individual can do no wrong. He belongs. He is respectable. Such a standard is a dangerous one. It is certainly not in accord with the classical definition of Jewishness and respectability as set forth by the ancient psalmist: "Who shall ascend the hill of the Lord and who shall stand in His holy place? He that hath clean hands and a pure heart: who hath not taken my name in vain, and hath not sworn deceitfully."

THE CRUELTY OF SOCIETY

A rabbi's study is oft a place of refuge for many who meet with defeat on the highway of life. The genuine teacher in Israel will always give an attentive ear to the broken in spirit. And on Erev Rosh Ha Shona such an one came to us. Six years he spent in prison. He wants to start all over again. It is useless to go back to the home town. He is an outcast. Society looks upon him as a "hardened" unregenerate criminal. Society doesn't forgive. Society is cruel. Yes, if only society possessed a little more of the quality of mercy, a little more love!

SCHOOL DAYS

About thirteen thousand Jewish children have enrolled in the secular schools of Montreal. We wonder how many of these do receive religious training—how many of these go to the religious schools or attend cheder? If the figures are correct not more than three thousand are directly associated with Jewish schools of some kind. What a community problem this presents. We who have been taught by the Mosaic Code—"And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children," we are neglecting one of the greatest traditions of our faith. Struggling, starving Russian Jewry in face of an atheistic government goes so far as to "Bootleg Hebrew Education." It does not break with the great Jewish tradition of learning. How much we, who live in pleasanter places, must make a greater effort on behalf of the Jewish child!

THIS IS RELIGION!

The Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America sent the following Rosh Ha Shona greeting to the Jews: "It is genuine religion that makes for goodwill."

"We Christians extend our sincere well wishes to the Jews. As your 5689th year opens Friday evening, we hope that Christians and Jews may make this a year of increased mutual understanding. Joined in common enterprise the progress of mankind, we believe we may find our unity as we realize our interdependence. Christians appreciate your achievements in the arts, the sciences, philosophy and in religion. In a very real sense you enrich humanity."

Leopold Bloom, of Chicago, philanthropist and retired Board of Trade operator, died early this week at the Drake Hotel following an illness of two weeks. At his bedside were his widow, a son, Aaron Bloom, and his daughters, Mrs. Maurice L. Rothschild and Mrs. Leopold E. Block. Another daughter, Mrs Joseph May, six grandchildren and one great-grandchild also survive. Mr. Bloom was long a business associate of Philip D. Armour. In 1875 he married Miss Babetta Slomacher, of New Orleans. Three years ago they celebrated their golden wedding anniversary at the Drake. Speaking of his father-in-law's reputation on the Board of Trade, Maurice L. Rothschild, Loop banker, said Mr. Bloom was well known for his generosity. "In those early days his word was a safer guaranty of payment than the bond of a man of today," Mr. Rothschild said. "Frequently friends and customers lost in the market and would have gone down and out if it had not been for a liberal stake given them by Mr. Bloom. He would say, 'If you lose the money, you owe me nothing.' Most of Chicago's business men at that time did business through him."

Cape Town Jewry has received a cable dispatch from Chief Rabbi Herta, asking for funds in relief of the Jews of Ukraine, who are in great distress. A committee has been organized in response to the appeal.

The hunting season is on, the season when the custodians of the dietary laws, not busy enough with observing the laws themselves, keep their eyes open for others who do not come up to scratch in orthodox devotion. The hunting season is usually opened with some such letter as the following to which the writer "forgot" to append his or her name:

"May I please use the medium of the mail box of your REVIEW to satisfy my curiosity? I hope this does not sound too ridiculous, but was the lunch counter of the Jewish Women's Council at the Canadian National Exhibition supposed to be carried on as a kosher lunch counter? I do not know if it was or not, but to my reasoning a place of its kind in charge of well-known Jewish women of Toronto should be run according to Jewish dietary laws. Do you not think that at least in such a public place an example should be set to the young Jewish boys and girls, who are the ones that will patronize it? I consider myself with the younger generation and was absolutely astonished and disgusted when served with a hot beef sandwich and tea with cream."

Answer: It does sound too ridiculous. And when did this column ever grab up hefty cudgels in defence of the dietary laws and their observance as an example to the young Jewish girls and boys? Do their very own inconsistent elders furnish them with a good example in orthodox observance? You expect nothing in this regard from Reform Jews generally. They make no pretence of not buying on Shabbas or not riding on holidays or not soaking the chicken in salt. But the sight of an orthodox Jew parking his car a block from shul so that his friends can't see him riding on the high holy days—well, brethren, this is indeed a depressing sight to the lover of consistency! If orthodox parents slip so from grace in the bosom of their families, why complain that the dietary laws are not observed in public? And if Jews will buy hot beef with tea and cream in a hotel or tea room, why discriminate against buying it from the Council of Jewish Women?

Many Jews of orthodox or traditional persuasion have just returned from holidays where they ate plenty of trefah from trefah dishes. Why this wearisome lip service to their religious belief? How many of them really and truly care about kashruth? They may defend it with their tongues, pens, contributions and spoken concern for the younger generation, but do they themselves want to observe all the laws as they know them? And just fancy a member of the younger generation in 1928 being absolutely astonished and disgusted when served with a hot beef sandwich at the same time as cream! The cream may have been sour, of course. Otherwise can the letter-writer really be called a member of the younger generation? Sounds rather pre-historic, like a sort of museum piece instead.

The United Synagogue of America, through Dr. Cyrus Adler' president of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America and also of Dropsie College, Philadelphia, has declared war on the indifference that is undermining the Jewish religion in this country and is going to arm itself with money, a great weapon. It will attempt to raise $500,000 for a national campaign to strengthen traditional Judaism. Of this sum, New York City is expected to raise $150,000 for toning up those synagogues which already call themselves Conservative. As far as Judaism is concerned New York's influence is tremendous, and if the quota is raised there it means that the Jews in the country at large will support the national campaign.

This points to upheaval, disputation and change in synagogues which now call themselves Orthodox and at least a rustle in others which aspire to Reform. Houses are going to be divided and if for no weightier reason than ennui in some instances. But there are undoubtedly people of conviction languishing in boredom in Orthodox membership who stay because they don't like Reform. And there are thousands who sit hatless or with little talesim who are lonesome for old-fashioned fare. They have all been waiting for this momentous occasion of compromise between yesterday and to-day.

Figures published recently by the United States Census Bureau and others compiled for the American Jewish Committee show that there are about four and one-quarter millions of Jews in the country taking religious sustenance from less than 3,000 synagogues. There is a vast majority of unaffiliated. To reach them, Dr. Adler and his embattled colleagues believe that an aggressive effort must be made to push a middle way between Orthodox extremists and Reform extremists. It is felt by the Conservative leaders that their cause has great possibilities, the power to call back to Judaism Jews who have acquired the habit of indifference and the power to lure and keep the younger generation.

To the detached observer these Conservative Jewish leaders seem as foolish as foxes. Judaism is yea, verily, in a critical condition and neither Reform nor Orthodoxy seems to be the correct stimulant. The Conservatives say that Orthodoxy is altogether too thick and Reform far too thin, but Conservatism is just exactly right to meet the pressing need. There is no question but that it has its points. It certainly has enough people to enchant. In every Orthodox synagogue there are people who would belong to a more modern shul so long as it isn't too Goyish and keeps some of the traditional symbols and habiliments. In every Reform synagogue there are people who are trying to get used to it but who do look backwards and sometimes with a lump in the throat. In order to catch the eye of these potential adherents the United Synagogue is going to spend its money where it counts. It is going to strengthen each synagogue already Conservative and wait watchfully for the unaffiliated Jews or those from across the way. It sounds very plausible. Do you agree?

In view of the news of a giant Zeppelin which is soon to come from Germany on a trans-Atlantic trip, it may be recalled that the first dirigible was invented and built by a Jugo-Slavian Jew, David Schwartz, who died in Vienna of shock when he received a telegram informing him that the German Government was interested in his invention and would further it. Count Zeppelin afterwards purchased the invention from Schwartz's widow and hence has been popularly credited as the actual inventor of the dirigible.

Starting TWO NEW FEATURES

The CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW is pleased to announce that beginning this week it will carry two permanent features of interest to every one who loves children.

Each week it will run the picture of some beautiful child or family of children. It will do your heart good to see them. They are so chubby and roly-poly these sun-bath times. The pictures will be good enough to cut out and frame. There is no age limit for children. Your son may be four months old or eleven years old. You are so proud of him you want other people to see what he looks like. As a subscriber of the REVIEW wherever you are you are invited to send in that picture.

Then this is the OTHER FEATURE

Little stories about the children. They can be amusing or touching or can contain some cute saying. Your little ones are doing things all the time that you want to tell some one about. Tell the REVIEW. The best one received each week will be published and a prize of $1 will be paid for it.

OUR CHILDREN

Subscribers of the CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW are invited to send in pictures of their lovely children. Give the full name, age, address and name of his parents. Pictures will be returned in good condition after they have appeared in the REVIEW. There is no age limit for children.

What the Children Say

Subscribers of the CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW are invited to send in little stories about their youngsters or children they know, what they say and do in interesting situations. Write down what your little one said to-day and mail it to the What-the-Children-Say Editor, REVIEW office, in Toronto or Montreal. Give the child's full name, age, address and the name of his parents. One dollar will be paid for every story printed.

INDIANS MAKE OPTIMISTIC PROPHECY OF FALL DEER HUNTING

Plenty of deer this season! That is the welcome news that comes from the North. Indian guides, who live all year 'round in the deer country, say that there will be big hunting this fall.

Through a science not found in books, these born hunters have made this prediction—and they are seldom wrong.

So start planning your party now. Check up your war gear—wipe the grease off your gun—and keep "the black and tan" running thin.

If you want to try new territory this year—or wish any information about licenses, fares, etc., ask the nearest agent of the Canadian National Railways.

THEY SAY "CHAMBRETTE"!

"Chambrette?—but yes, M'sieu, a little room for the sleep . . . with a bed so comfortable . . . so many things to make pleasant the journey—it is like sleeping at my old home. And when you reach Montreal you are so rested."

In one word "Chambrette" can be described the comfort, convenience and privacy of the Single Room Sleeping Cars, now in use by Canadian National on the 10 p.m. and 11 p.m. trains from Toronto to Montreal. Reservations at City Ticket Office, Canadian National Railways.

BASEBALL NEWS

During the week of Monday, September 17, only two games were played in the Jewish Community League. On Monday night Judaean Benevolent won the championship of the businessmen's group by defeating Sunnysides in the third and final game of their series, by the score of 19 to 9, with the winners being the better team. Dr. Joe Finmark was the star player for the Oddfellow team, while all the winner's players got one or more hits, with Sweig pitching an effective game. Freidman, Zelden, Sweig and B. Cohen all got three hits. On the following night Tuex evened the play-off series with Herzls to see which team meets Leonards in the league finals, a three-run lead in the first inning giving them the game by the score of 5 to 3. Both teams had 11 hits, but Tuex used theirs to better advantage, with Len Mehr leading his team at bat with three singles, while Milt Weiss played a star game at third for the winners. Appleby had nine strikeouts, but his team lost several chances to win out. Herzls and Tuex were to break the tie Tuesday, September 25, with the winner of the game meeting Leonards in a sudden death affair to decide the winner of the Leon Scher trophy on the following Thursday night. "Bobbie" Rosenfeld was there. Details of these games in the next REVIEW. At the executive meeting of the league Thursday, September 20, the annual banquet was discussed. The date was set for the evening of Thursday, October 11, at Lazar's, on Queen Street West. Mr. Lazar has donated a prize for the outstanding player in the senior loop. By unanimous vote of the executive it was awarded to Meyer Miller, captain of Hasmonians. There will be prizes for the leading batter in the league, the most valuable player on each team, and the Leon Scher trophy will be presented. The league averages will be given soon in THE REVIEW. Ali Hasan

"Will I ever see all the pictures, collectively, in order to know the complete secret of life?"

Once, in a quiet and peaceful night, it seemed as if a soft hand descended upon him and carried him away, high, high over the clouds, and then he saw that his eyes were looking in all directions, through all distances at the same time.

And from somewhere resounded a voice, speaking:

"Look and see everything in one glance."

And he saw everything in one glance. . . . The pain of those who are afflicted with leprosy; the dance of the merry folks; the trading and bargaining of the buyers; the enthusiasm of the artists and connoisseurs; the moaning and lamentation of the mourners. Then everything became mixed. The result was one great emptiness. . . .

Then Ali Hasan's eyes closed forever. The frost of death was lying around his heart.

Saul Raskin, the artist, will during the month of September hold an exhibition of summer etudes at his studio, 96 Fifth Avenue. NORTHERN ONTARIO CANADA

Northern Ontario, now open for settlement at fifty cents per acre, contains millions of acres of the finest agricultural land in the world. Its resources in lumber, minerals, water, power, fish, game and scenery are immense. The land calls for men to cultivate it, and in return will give health, comfort and prosperity.

What settlers say of the soil, climate farming and forest life, is told in a most attractive booklet issued under the direction of the Honourable John S. Martin, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario. Full instructions in regards to acquiring a title to these rich agricultural lands are also given.

Qoheleth—the Man and the Book

By RABBI J. L. ZLOTNIK

The following article is a translation from the Yiddish preface to "Qoheleth—the Man and the Book" by Rabbi J. L. Zlotnik, whose book also contains a Yiddish translation of the Book of Qoheleth itself.—Ed. Note.)

It has been said long ago that the man who thinks sees the world as a comedy, while to the man who feels, the world seems as a tragedy. The man who thinks is the philosopher, the man of brains. The man who feels is the poet, the man of heart. Qoheleth was both. He was a poet as well as a philosopher and not only was he naturally inclined to investigate, to examine and to scrutinize the world around him, but this inclination became with him a passion. He thus, as he himself expresses it, gives all his heart to "inquire and to search." But at the same time he has also the sensitive heart which longs for beauty and for joy and which is painfully wounded by injustice and brutality. A long and bitter struggle ensues between the poet and the philosopher in Qoheleth. The poet in him sees the world as a tragedy; the philosopher sees the comedy of existence, the aimlessness of life and the meaninglessness of all human aspirations. Thus is created the most remarkable of all books, the Book of Qoheleth, which is designated by Heine as the Song of Songs of scepticism and which Delitzsch calls the Song of Songs of religion.

The philosopher can look at existence in a detached way. He can see the world as a madhouse and smile ruefully. The philosopher can doubt; he can nod knowingly and shrug his shoulders—perhaps—who knows—maybe. He can support the thought that perhaps in reality the world is only like a boat without a rudder. There may be neither system nor watchman. "Thou makest man like the fishes of the sea, like the creeping things that have no ruler over them."

But the poet cannot yield to such an attitude. He cannot doubt: still less can he afford to contemplate life and remain indifferent, to be merely an onlooker. He cannot doubt—because he knows. The poet feels in his innermost heart that in the immensity of the Universe there is a plan as well as a system, there is law and there is judgment, there is cause and consequence. That there is harmonious beauty which denotes the eye that watches, the hand that guides and the mind that rules. Iniquity, brutality, unrighteous might and inordinate lust are ugly and repellant and in contrast to the harmony of the world's order and thus impossible. And yet all he sees around him, all that takes place before his eyes is so different to what he would wish it to be.

You cannot deny the facts: but you cannot explain them either. Helpless you stand before the mysterious Sphinx with his mocking smile who asks you question after question and puts before you riddle after riddle, while you stand stupefied, finding no answer. Then ruthlessly he digs his claws deeper and deeper, until they sink into your heart which bleeds and bleeds.

At last after the storm and stress are over, comes peace. Uncertainties and hesitations disappear. A light and mild zephyr disperses the depressing clouds. And the sun reappears in its full bright beauty. Thus the poet exclaims in his ecstasy: "Truly the light is sweet and it is a pleasant thing for the eyes to see the sun." It is the poet who conquers.

Qoheleth, like all Jewish seers and great teachers, was more poet than philosopher. Still his philosophical speculations have not been wasted and did not disappear before leaving a trace and exerting a beneficent influence. Stilled is the previous all-powerful passion for the joys of life. Stilled are the temperamental and seething outbursts which no longer rule unrestrained. A majestic peace and moderation dictate opinion and action. Instead of indignant condemnation, there is now an all-understanding and all-forgiving spirit. Soft and calm look now the all-seeing eyes of the old ruler. Life is certainly no comedy; neither is it a tragedy. The world and life are good and beautiful. But life is also serious—though not to be taken too seriously.

During many a generation the rabbis and their pupils in their schools of learning, quibbled and fought over the question whether to accept Qoheleth or to reject him. It was a long and bitter strife. At length the poet was the conqueror. Together with the Psalms and the Book of Job, the Book of Qoheleth, the most remarkable human document known, has been included in the canons of holy books. The conquering poet went still further and Rabbi Akiba said: "All scriptures are holy, yet the Song of Songs is the holy of holiest."

When Samuel David Luzato was at the age of twenty, he attacked with intense virulence the Book of Qoheleth. He condemned it as injurious, misguiding and anti-religious. When Samuel David Luzato was forty years older, he came with a public confession regretting his ill-advised words, acknowledging that from the innumerable books that he read and studied during his long life, there was no book which exerted so great an influence on his character and from which he learned so much of the conduct of life, as the Book of Qoheleth. Pathetically he wrote in a letter to his friend: "I, who in my days attacked so bitterly the Book of Qoheleth, am now openly confessing that Qoheleth was my teacher and guide who pointed out to me the best path to follow in life. He taught me to be satisfied with my portion. To be happy with whatever I have and to realize that all that man strives and struggles for, is of no real value for him and if he does something unbecoming in order to better his lot, it will bring him neither happiness nor satisfaction. And even were he to amass heaps of gold, it will help him neither to enjoy life nor to find peace for his soul."

This is the Book of Qoheleth, which Renan, while cursing as Balaam of old, must still bless, saying of it: "Livre charmant, le seul livre aimable qui ait été composé par un juif."

Along the Jewish Broadway

By ABRAHAM JACOBY

Talmudic scholars, withdrawing short gray beards from their accustomed trailings up and down the long pages of the revered "Mishna" and "Gemara," slowly peered at the calendar, shaking a sorrowful head at the slow approach of September 15. Slender, young Jewesses, their eyes taking on a capricious brightness, delicately hinted to their curly-headed swains that September 15 was but a short distance off. And "Yentas" (the magpies of the Jewish race) grew more and more voluble as the pages on the calendar dropped away, leaving Jewish stage directors less and less time to hammer their casts into shape. All was excitement along the Jewish Broadway and all eyes turned expectantly toward the day.

On that day, at the crack of the theatrical gun, the curtain rose on a Jewish Broadway in full bloom. For every dramatic or musical offering of note for the first time in history had a premiere at the same time. This was made possible, recently, by the mutual consent of the Jewish producers, all of whom gathered under the banner of the Jewish Managers Protective Association and decided that nothing was to be gained by working against each other.

Each and every production, then, did toe the line at the same time—and may the best one win!

It is little known, but nevertheless true, that the Broadway whose heart is Times Square has no historian and no authoritative or current "Who's Who of the Theatre." Therefore, should an event such as the wholesale rising of the Jewish curtains unexpectedly take place in Times Square, it would only be inscribed for posterity in New York's daily journals.

In this respect, the Jewish stage is one jump ahead of its Christian brother. After considerable pain and labour, Zalman Selberzweig, a Jewish journalist, has prepared for publication a volume called "The Lexicon of the Yiddish Stage." Aside from giving details concerning the lives of actors and actresses, the lexicon will furnish a complete history of the Jewish stage from the time it first began with the touring troupes of male players in Roumania to the present day. The book, sponsored by a Jewish daily and Max Gabel, rumor has it, is expected to be off the presses during the course of next month.

The forthcoming volume, of course, will make no mention of the success of Maurice Schwartz in his ambitious attempt to establish his reportory in Fourteenth Street. Its first edition will come too early for a review of this adventure.

In the waning days of last season, it may be remembered, Mr. Schwartz made public his intention to forsake his handsome place at Second Avenue and Twelfth Street for a ten-year lease of Fox's City Theatre. Together with this an appeal was made for a subscription list. Mr. Schwartz tells me that he has collected approximately $45,000 from 10,000 persons with which to institute his repertoire of plays.

His first play, "For the Sake of God," by Sholem Ash, is now in rehearsal by a group including Celia Adler, a daughter of the famous Jacob Adler; Bina Abramowitz, Anna Teitlebaum and Paul Baratoss. Among the plays to be seen in Fourteenth Street there will be the first Yiddish version of "Othello," done in modern dress. Paul Baratoss will play the title role and Mr. Schwartz himself will appear as Iago. Levick's "Golem," an adaptation in Yiddish of the Hebrew play which the Habimi presented, will be produced along with plays by Sholom Aleichem entitled "Menachem Mendel," by Malach's "The Holy Virgin" and Kazizna's "The Ducuss."

Ludwig Satz, the comical favourite endeared to Jewish hearts for his Abe Potash in the A. H. Woods presentation of "Potash and Perlmutter," will bounce out upon the stage of the Public Theatre next Saturday, in "A Prince There Was," a musical comedy by Herman Wohl. In Mr. Satz's support will be Zena Goldstein, Fanny Lubritsky, Boris Rosenthal, Leon Gold, Charles Nathanson, Abe Sincoff, Sidney Hart, Sam Blum and a large chorus.

Molly Picon blossoms out in a new operetta by Joseph Rumshinsky. Kessler's Second Avenue Theatre is her place of debut and her supporting list of players offers Irving Grossman, Samuel Kasten and Max Wilner.

A hop, skip and jump from the Picon debut, Max Gabel, the combined Owen Davis and Willard Mack of the Yiddish theatre, will present his latest melodrama, "The Cantor's Daughter," at the Peoples Theatre on the Bowery. Mr. Gabel is the proud father of almost three hundred Jewish melodramas. Jennie Goldstein, wife of the tireless Gabel, will be co-starred along with her husband in a company of players which offers Goldie Lubritsky, David Popper, David Yanover and Mary Wilensky.

The Jewish Broadway, like the Jewish race itself, is parted in many places and strewn about. One piece is drawn in a thin line down Second Avenue and Twelfth Street to the Bowery. Another has a strangle hold on Fourteenth Street, the root from which sprang Times Square. The last piece rests in no other place than the Bronx. There, at the Prospect Theatre, Nathan and Rose Goldberg will appear next Saturday as the two stars of a new Jewish operetta by Phillip Laskofsky and H. Kalmenovitz.

The piece is called "Mother's Sweetheart" and is enacted by a supporting cast made up of Lucy Finkel, Peter Graf, Paul Bernstein, Katie Kaplan, Annie Augenblick, Harry Feld, Morris Dorf, Hyman Rapporport, Gus Goldstein and a large chorus.
